Senator Lucia Borgonzoni

Undersecretary of State for Culture

Ever since its inception, MIA | Mercato Internazionale Audiovisivo has established itself as a benchmark event for the audiovisual industry: a key gathering place for dialogue and exchange on the major challenges and opportunities driving a sector that is strategic to the cultural and economic growth of our country.

Year after year, MIA has shown a remarkable ability to interpret market shifts, anticipate trends, and guide its evolution through an innovative formula that connects producers, distributors, investors, and professionals from all over the world. It provides an invaluable opportunity to strengthen international partnerships, foster new co-productions, support project development, and promote the circulation of audiovisual works.

Fostering industry synergies, highlighting our talents, and enhancing the international competitiveness of the Italian audiovisual sector are fundamental goals. They allow us to keep investing in a field that serves not only as a vital engine for growth, but also as an extraordinary medium for showcasing our identity, culture, and creativity.

In an ever-evolving global landscape—marked by accelerating technological advancements and the new horizons opened by Artificial Intelligence—it is more critical than ever to create spaces for discussion, share expertise, and map out strategies that balance progress, quality, and the protection of creative labor. New technologies must serve as tools to empower human ingenuity, without ever replacing the indispensable value of ideas, sensitivity, and artistic vision.

It is with this conviction that the Ministry of Culture renews its support for MIA, recognizing its strategic role in enhancing dialogue among industry stakeholders and unlocking new growth opportunities.

Continuing to support the excellence of our audiovisual industry means investing in the future of Italian culture. It equips our professionals with the tools to compete globally while safeguarding and celebrating the cultural identity that makes our country unique and internationally recognized.

Francesco Rocca

President of the Lazio Region

The audiovisual sector holds a central place in the identity and economy of Lazio. It is a heritage of creativity, expertise, and professionalism that combines the strength of a great tradition with the capacity to experiment with new languages. Supporting this industry means investing in jobs, business growth, and the opportunity to showcase our region to the world.

The 12th edition of MIA | Mercato Internazionale Audiovisivo fits into this vision: a platform where ideas meet the resources needed to become productions, projects find partners, and businesses build relationships beyond national borders. For Rome and Lazio, MIA represents a key opportunity to consolidate their role on the international audiovisual stage.

As a Regional Government, we want to make these opportunities increasingly accessible to the region's small and medium-sized enterprises. Our contribution to MIA stems from this goal and translates into supporting training programs, project presentations, and meetings with potential partners. Guiding businesses into international markets means helping them highlight their expertise, develop co-productions, and reach new audiences.

This vision also inspired "Roma Lazio in Serie", the initiative promoted by the Region alongside the Fondazione Roma Lazio Film Commission, in collaboration with MIA, the Rome Film Fest, and Alice nella Città. Television series represent an increasingly significant component of the audiovisual industry, capable of engaging diverse audiences and creating opportunities for the entire supply chain. Through this project, we aim to showcase productions created in Lazio and the work of those who make them possible, building a space where authors, actors, producers, industry professionals, and audiences can connect. It is a collaboration that places the cultural and industrial value of the sector at its core, strengthening ties across its various partners.

This commitment is further demonstrated through instruments such as Lazio Cinema International, through which we support the production of international audiovisual works in our territory. We aim to encourage investments capable of generating skilled employment, reinforcing the local supply chain, and highlighting Lazio's rich cultural and scenic heritage.

I believe the role of public institutions is to foster the conditions that allow talent to express itself and turn into concrete career opportunities. This requires attention to new generations, independent productions, and smaller organizations that, despite limited resources, possess the vision and ability to compete.

MIA helps build these conditions by connecting creativity with enterprise, and a local dimension with an international horizon. Supporting it means contributing to the future of a sector that has much to offer to Lazio's growth and its capacity to create culture.

Matteo Zoppas

President of ITA - Italian Trade Agency

Preface to the MIA 2026 Catalogue

Made in Italy is not only synonymous with manufacturing quality and industry, it is also culture, creativity, and innovation. In this spirit, the ITA - Italian Trade Agency is renewing its strong support to MIA - Mercato Internazionale Audiovisivo in 2026, consolidating a long-standing strategic partnership with ANICA and APA. This collaboration fits fully into the framework of the Growth Diplomacy promoted by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, aimed at promoting Italian audiovisual excellence, fostering co-productions and strengthening the international competitiveness of our companies.

The twelfth edition of MIA, set in the iconic district between Palazzo Barberini and Via Veneto confirms Rome as the capital of the global audiovisual industry and a privileged observatory on industry transformations. ITA keeps playing a key role in the organization and enhancement of the event by supporting the incoming of 500+ foreign operators and buyers from 60 countries.

The 2026 edition marks an important evolutionary step for the event: with over 630 submitted projects and a renewed industrial program spanning cinema, series, documentaries, animation, and factual content, MIA adopts innovative tools to address the sector's challenges. Key highlights include the European Investment Hub - a platform designed to bring companies closer to complex European and international financial instruments - and the new Gap Financing program dedicated to animated series.

For the ITA, Italian Trade Agency, supporting MIA means investing in a fundamental system infrastructure capable not only of connecting creativity, industry, and finance, but also of enhancing the entire production chain and its professionals, consolidating Italy's central role in the global audiovisual landscape.

Giorgio Carlo Brugnoni

Director General for Cinema and Audiovisual, Ministry of Culture

Now in its twelfth edition, MIA | Mercato Internazionale Audiovisivo has increasingly consolidated its position as one of the premier European and international events dedicated to the film and audiovisual industry, bringing together operators, institutions, and professionals from Italy and across the globe.

This year's edition once again opens its doors alongside the Rome Film Fest, creating a synergistic and complementary bridge between festival and market. It places Rome at the center of the European and international cinematic and audiovisual landscape - spanning from the prestigious setting of the Auditorium Parco della Musica Ennio Morricone to the Casa del Cinema, Piazza Barberini, Palazzo Barberini, and along Via Veneto, one of the most iconic and recognizable streets in the history of Italian cinema and global film culture. MIA offers a prime opportunity for networking among businesses, professionals, institutions, and international industry leaders - a platform where film, audiovisual art, and new forms of creativity engage with their present state and, above all, address the upcoming challenges in shaping the future.

The widespread participation underscores MIA's growing relevance on the international stage as well as its capacity for innovation. At the same time, it reflects a vital industry navigating an era of profound transformation - from integration and consolidation processes to technological advances, particularly the impact of artificial intelligence, and shifting audience consumption habits. In this climate, it is all the more essential to recognize ourselves as part of a broader space: one where we can engage with the film and audiovisual industries of other European and non-European countries, fostering collaboration, the exchange of ideas and expertise, and building new opportunities for co-production.

It is precisely within this framework that the Directorate General for Cinema and Audiovisual of the Italian Ministry of Culture (DG-CA) and the Centre National du Cinéma et de l'Image Animée (CNC) have set out to follow up on the enhanced cooperation program for the film and audiovisual sectors - signed in Antibes on June 25, 2026, during the Italy-France Intergovernmental Summit by the Italian Minister of Culture, Alessandro Giuli, and the French Minister of Culture, Catherine Pégard. To this end, they have established and convened for the first time the expert group on European policies in the film and audiovisual sectors, designed as a platform for dialogue and reflection between institutional representatives and professionals from both countries. The goal is to foster a shared assessment of common challenges related to European regulatory frameworks, support policies for creation and production, and the evolving distribution models for creative works.

Chiara Sbarigia

President, APA

Italian production has the power to tell stories that the world wants to see. Today, the real challenge lies in empowering companies to plan, develop, and produce works that are effectively distributed and reach their intended audiences.

To meet this challenge, with the twelfth edition of MIA, we decided to shift its center of gravity and rethink its format—moving away from simply reflecting what the audiovisual industry has already produced, and toward actively creating the conditions for businesses to innovate, grow, and compete on global markets. All while remaining steadfast on the audiovisual sector's two strategic assets: content quality and a strong connection with the audience.

For over a decade, the industry has been evolving at an increasingly rapid pace, requiring independent producers to navigate unprecedented editorial challenges, innovative distribution strategies, and new financial instruments. Within the audiovisual space, we are therefore shining a spotlight on micro-dramas, emerging forms of serialized content, and what we deliberately define in broad terms as the “digital environment” - a segment to which APA has dedicated a specific study to be presented as part of the 8th Annual Audiovisual Report. Significant focus is also dedicated to the Gap Financing Market, our new program tailored to animated series, alongside the consolidation of the European Investments Hub to address the concrete needs of independent producers, where APA will present its public-private fund initiative.

We no longer live in a national bubble: while the international landscape certainly brings competition, it also offers strategic partnerships and new opportunities. To facilitate networking and business encounters among professionals, we have also reimagined our venue logistics to offer warmer, more functional spaces. Alongside the magnificent halls of Palazzo Barberini, this year's MIA will take place across the hotels of Via Veneto - the iconic street of the Dolce Vita - which for one week will transform into a true "Audiovisual District."

MIA's core mission remains unchanged: keeping the market closely aligned with a rapidly changing global context, capturing new creative languages, production models, and funding opportunities. The excellence of Italian content is our starting point, but turning that quality into industrial value demands investment, expertise, and international relationships. APA will continue to work tirelessly to ensure that MIA guides the entire supply chain toward this goal within increasingly integrated ecosystems.

Alessandro Usai

President, ANICA

The true value of a market is measured not only by its ability to attract projects and industry leaders, but above all by its capacity to turn meetings into collaborations, ideas into completed works, and talent into industrial growth. This is the core strength of MIA, which once again in 2026 confirms its status as one of the most vital events for both the Italian and international audiovisual sectors.

Year after year, the Market has consolidated its global standing, becoming a premier venue for dialogue among talent, businesses, producers, distributors, broadcasters, streamers, investors, and public institutions. The figures for this edition bear witness to its growing appeal: more than 500 projects from 82 countries were submitted to the Co-Production Market—a result that highlights MIA's ability to tap into creativity, expertise, and opportunities from around the world.

The high caliber of the selected projects, paired with expanded pitching, networking, co-production, and development activities, reinforces MIA's role as a launchpad capable of guiding works from initial concept to full realization and market release.

This function is all the more crucial during a period of profound transformation across the audiovisual industry. Production and distribution models are shifting, viewing habits are evolving, and technological innovation continues to multiply opportunities. At the same time, securing the necessary resources to develop and bring new projects to life has become increasingly complex. The challenge, therefore, is not merely generating creativity, but building the right conditions for that creativity to translate into business, employment, and long-term value.

It is within this framework that one of the defining highlights of MIA 2026 takes shape: the European Investment Hub, two days dedicated to European and international financial instruments supporting the audiovisual, cultural, and creative industries. The goal is to foster meaningful dialogue between enterprises, investors, and institutions—making available financial pathways more accessible and driving new collaborative ventures. In doing so, the European Investment Hub strengthens MIA's mission not simply to serve as an international showcase, but to act as a full-fledged service aggregator for the industry. The MIA Development Awards, alongside our co-production and gap financing initiatives, work toward the exact same end: transforming visibility and professional connections into tangible paths forward.

The audiovisual landscape of 2026 is inherently global, competitive, and interconnected. Italy boasts an extraordinary legacy of creativity, expertise, and production capacity. We must continue to elevate this heritage by empowering our companies and amplifying their presence across international markets.

ANICA strongly supports the ongoing growth of MIA, firmly believing that strengthening the Market means fortifying the entire national audiovisual ecosystem and consolidating Italy's standing as an international creative and production hub.

It is precisely this capacity to unite culture and industry, talent and capital, vision and opportunity that makes MIA a strategic cornerstone for the present and future of screen industries. In this spirit, ANICA will continue to work side by side with APA to ensure that MIA keeps expanding, innovating, and driving the industry forward.

Gaia Tridente

MIA Director

The audiovisual industry is undergoing a profound transformation. New business models, changing audience behaviours, evolving financing structures and the growing convergence of creative sectors are redefining how stories are developed, produced, financed and brought to audiences around the world.

In this rapidly changing landscape, international markets have a responsibility that goes beyond connecting professionals and showcasing projects. They must become places where the industry can question established models, anticipate emerging trends and, above all, create the conditions for new ideas and opportunities to take shape. This is the ambition behind MIA 2026.

This year marks an important step forward in the evolution of our market. A change of pace, but also a change of perspective: one that places talent, creativity and intellectual property at the heart of an increasingly interconnected audiovisual ecosystem, while embracing the new dynamics shaping the global industry.

We have reimagined MIA as a platform capable of accompanying projects and companies across the entire value chain, from the discovery and development of original ideas to international co-production, financing, distribution and the creation of long-term value.

Our evolution is also reflected in a new visual manifesto, capturing MIA's ambition to observe today's transformations while imagining tomorrow's possibilities. This year, MIA also embraces a new dimension across iconic venues in the heart of Rome, a city that is an essential part of our identity and our international outlook.

The driving force behind this transformation remains our greatest asset: the MIA community. A global network of talents, professionals, companies and institutions whose ideas, vision and commitment make our market a place where meaningful connections become real opportunities. My sincere thanks to APA and ANICA, our institutional partners and supporters, the entire MIA team, and everyone who continues to believe in and contribute to this journey.

Welcome to the MIA 2026 universe.

Fireside Chat With Edward Berger

Is it possible to preserve creative independence when working on large-scale films for a global audience? Writer, director, and producer Edward Berger has built an international career capable of combining a strong auteur vision with highly ambitious productions. Following the worldwide success of All Quiet on the Western Front (2022), produced and directed for Netflix and winner of four Academy Awards, Berger directed Conclave (2024), his first English-language feature film. In this conversation, he retraces his creative journey, exploring the relationship between artistic freedom, international-scale production, and the ability to reach a wide audience without sacrificing a personal voice.

Equity & Growth Capital: Investing In Creativity, Ip And Long-Term Value

As financing models evolve, equity capital is becoming an increasingly important driver of growth across the audiovisual industry. Alongside traditional financing sources, equity investors are supporting ambitious productions, scalable slates and intellectual property strategies, while enabling companies to strengthen their market position and unlock new opportunities for international expansion.

This session brings together leading investment funds, media finance advisors and industry executives to explore how equity is reshaping the financing landscape. From project and slate investments to strategic partnerships and corporate growth, the discussion will examine what investors look for, how creative businesses can become investment-ready, and why long-term value creation is becoming as important as financing individual productions.

Fireside Chat With Kim Longinotto

A conversation with Kim Longinotto, one of the most influential and uncompromising documentary filmmakers of our time, who for over four decades has portrayed the lives of women around the world with a deeply empathetic, independent and politically engaged perspective. From rebellious performers in Japan and activists fighting FGM in Kenya to female judges in Cameroon and photographers confronting the Sicilian Mafia, Longinotto has created a body of work that breaks silences, exposes injustice and gives visibility and dignity to voices too often unheard. This intimate fireside chat will explore her distinctive filmmaking approach, the experiences and convictions that have shaped her career, her latest film Dalton's Dream, and the book she is currently writing about her extraordinary life and work behind the camera.

Pitch and Diploma Ceremony of the Master in Serial Fiction Writing

The closing ceremony of the 6th Master's Programme in Serial Screenwriting—organized by Rai Fiction in collaboration with APA and the Centro di Giornalismo di Perugia—presents the audience with 5 pitches for original TV series projects developed by the students to complete their coursework. In the past, several pitches presented on this occasion were optioned and subsequently produced (such as Survivors / Sopravvissuti, broadcast on Rai 1 in 2022, and Nemo, currently in post-production and coming soon to Rai 1). The students pitching today are set to undertake a two-month internship with a TV series production company: interested producers are warmly encouraged to step forward!

Fireside Chat With Anna Marsh

As the audiovisual landscape continues to evolve, a new European studio model is taking shape — one that combines production, financing, distribution and IP management to build global success from European stories. At the forefront of this transformation, STUDIOCANAL is developing an integrated approach that brings together scale and international reach with a strong connection to Europe's creative ecosystems, talent and storytelling. In this fireside chat, Anna Marsh will discuss how this model can strengthen Europe's ability to compete in a global marketplace: from IP ownership and long-term value creation to the balance between creative ambition and financial sustainability, and the challenge of turning locally rooted stories into content with worldwide appeal.

Shared Shores. Euro-Mediterranean Documentary Markets Coalition

Developed by Thessaloniki Agora, DocsBarcelona Pro, MIA and Afiamuna Connection, the Euro-Mediterranean Documentary Markets Alliance is a new initiative designed to strengthen connections between the Northern and Southern shores of the Mediterranean and create more structured access to European documentary markets and professional networks. At a time when documentary production and financing are becoming increasingly complex, the alliance aims to foster Euro-Mediterranean cooperation, open new pathways for projects and talents, and broaden access to financing and co-production opportunities. The first project selected as part of the collaboration is KARAMA by Fatym Layachi, which will be presented as the inaugural title of the initiative. By connecting markets, territories and perspectives, Shared Shores seeks to contribute to a more diverse and interconnected documentary ecosystem, while exploring how markets themselves can help reshape the geography of opportunity within the international documentary industry.

Strategies For Glocal Storytelling: How To Shape And Present International-Ready Docs

How can a story deeply rooted in a specific territory become a documentary capable of reaching international audiences? What elements enable a project to transcend national borders? These are the questions that Diego Buñuel, Director of Development at France Télévisions Studio, will address in a workshop dedicated to the principles of “glocal storytelling.” Drawing on concrete examples and his experience in the development and selection of documentary projects, Buñuel will explore how to identify the universal potential of a local story, build a strong narrative arc, and make creative choices that can resonate with viewers from different cultural backgrounds. The workshop is aimed both at emerging filmmakers and at professionals looking to strengthen the international positioning of their projects.

International Broadcasters:

The documentary landscape is undergoing a profound transformation driven by shifting viewer habits, shrinking budgets, and changing editorial priorities. Major broadcasters are pivoting documentaries toward VOD platforms to engage digital-first audiences; this shift directly impacts how stories are conceived and structured. Meanwhile, ongoing budget constraints and volatile editorial priorities continue to heighten uncertainty across productions. In this climate, is there still space for high-impact documentaries in broadcasters’ schedules? And how can producers effectively pitch to and partner with decision-makers today?

Film Consumption In Italy:

Audiences Between Cinema and other Screens

The study, conducted by ERGO Research for ANICA, describes the phenomenon of film consumption on paid services during an experimental observation period, analyzing the most market-relevant aspects with a focus on Italian productions and, more broadly, on the value generated by different distribution models in connecting films with their audiences.

Following this, ANICA will host a discussion among representatives from production, distribution, and audiovisual media services featuring films in their catalogues and schedules. The goal is to examine the key findings of the research and discuss, from various perspectives, the dynamics shaping the journey of works from the cinema screen to subsequent viewing platforms.

Presenting:

Independent Producers, But Independent From Whom?

For thirty years, being independent meant just one thing: not belonging to a national broadcaster. Today, much of Italian and European production is owned by large international groups, global platforms have become the main commissioners, and the value of a work hinges on rights, exploitation windows and data. The old criterion, therefore, is no longer enough. The panel aims to compare the Italian and European models with a view to the revision of the AVMS Directive. The underlying question is what a producer should be independent of today: capital, the commissioner, control of rights or access to data?

Iginio Straffi | Founder and President, Rainbow - Vice President, APA - Associazione Produttori Audiovisivi (Italy)

Riccardo Tozzi | Founder, Cattleya (Italy)

Innovation Meets Distribution How Technology Is Changing The Business Of European Distributors

Technology is increasingly becoming a strategic asset for film distribution. But which tools are already helping distributors make better decisions, reduce inefficiencies and unlock the full value of their catalogues?

Featuring innovative solutions developed within the European audiovisual ecosystem, including projects supported by Creative Europe MEDIA, the session will bring together innovators and distribution professionals to discuss how new tools are already delivering measurable business value by optimising workflows, improving decision-making, expanding audience reach and creating new revenue opportunities.

The panel will explore three different approaches to technology and innovation in distribution:

Mnemonica Archive, a cloud-based solution designed to optimise the preservation, management and circulation of audiovisual assets; Timeless Cinema, a platform dedicated to film heritage that facilitates connections between rights holders, catalogue owners, distributors and exhibitors, helping to enhance the circulation and accessibility of catalogue titles; European Moviegoer Analysis, a tool, developed by Vertigo Research, that combines AI and audience data to predict viewer behavior and optimise marketing and distribution strategies, with the aim of improving the commercial performance of European films.

Opening remarks:

Roberto Stabile, Project Manager, Creative Europe Desk Italy MEDIA, Cinecittà Spa

Speakers:

Piero Costantini, CEO and Founder, Mnemonica
 Leslie Vuchot, CEO and Founder, Timeless Cinema
 Lionel Baurier, Head of Development, Vertigo Research
 Jakub Duszynski, Head of Acquisitions, Gutek Film

Moderator:

Davide Dellacasa, CEO and Co-founder, Brad&k Productions

Organised by the Creative Europe Desk Italy MEDIA, Desk MEDIA France (Relais Culture Europe) and Mnemonica, in collaboration with MIA | Mercato Internazionale Audiovisivo, the panel aims to foster dialogue between innovators and distributors focusing on industry needs and emerging solutions.

The event is open to all MIA-accredited participants.

Who Are We Still Making Drama For? Reconnecting Storytelling And Audiences

Has the audience abandoned drama—or has drama abandoned the audience? As younger generations spend less time with traditional television and increasingly discover stories through social platforms, creators and digitally native formats, the scripted industry faces a difficult question: can premium drama still command broad attention and remain culturally relevant? This provocative conversation brings commissioners, producers, studios and new digital players into dialogue to examine how audience expectations, viewing habits and pathways to discover are changing and what those changes mean for the stories we develop, commission and produce. Social media, the creator economy and microdrama will be considered not as isolated trends or competing forms, but as signals of a deeper transformation in how stories enter people’s lives, build communities and become part of the cultural conversation. What can traditional drama learn from these new behaviors without sacrificing complexity, ambition or creative identity? And how can storytellers and audiences find their way back to one another?

Producing With AI: Augmentation Or Replacement?

Artificial intelligence is rapidly moving from experimentation to real-world application across the audiovisual value chain. From development and pre-production to visual effects, localisation and post-production, AI promises to make filmmaking faster, more flexible and more cost-efficient. But as its capabilities expand, a more fundamental question is emerging: is AI empowering producers and creative teams—or beginning to replace parts of the traditional production process? Bringing together producers, technology innovators and industry leaders already working at the intersection of AI and content creation, this panel will look beyond the hype to examine how AI is actually being integrated into production today. Where can it unlock new creative possibilities, reduce costs and allow ambitious ideas to reach the screen? Which roles and workflows are likely to be transformed? And where should the industry draw the line between technological efficiency and human creative control?

Back To The Future: It's All About The Story

In recent years, the global audiovisual landscape has undergone a major transformation, shifting from a linear model to a fluid, interconnected ecosystem. The growth of streaming platforms, enhanced by the availability of premium content and digital rental and purchase options (VOD, TVOD, and EST), the renewed interest in high-definition physical formats, and the strategic return of the theatrical release as a final destination, have placed audiences back at the center of the experience.

Today's viewers are increasingly aware that respect for copyright is not merely a formal obligation, but a conscious choice made by those who value cinema.

The pursuit of premium audio and video quality, the immersive nature of the theatrical experience, and respect for creative work have become the key of legal consumption.

Within this evolving framework, it is crucial to examine how the audiovisual ecosystem is adapting to the benefits of all the parts involved, as well as the future trends are shaping both national and international markets.
